

Milk House

The stream from a nearby spring of water ran through a wooden trough in the center of the house and kept it cool. Fresh milk was drawn from shining tin pans that were placed on shelves on the walls. The milk house was also the place where cooked left overs from meals, along with butter in crocks were kept.

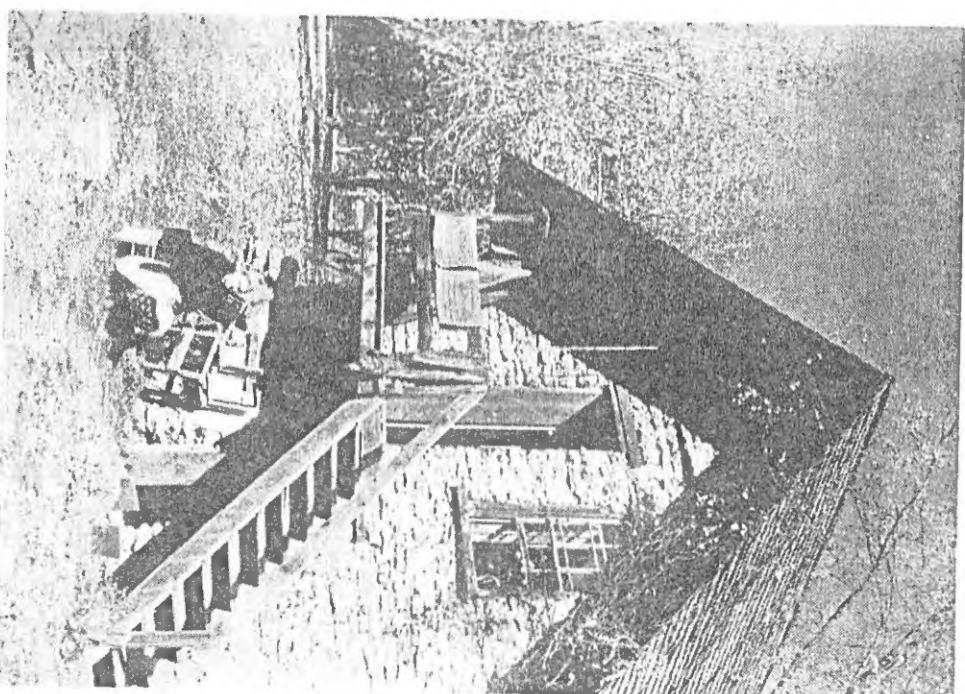

Located on the John Huber farm, this building is now part of the Wasatch State Park and can be seen on the Golf Course.

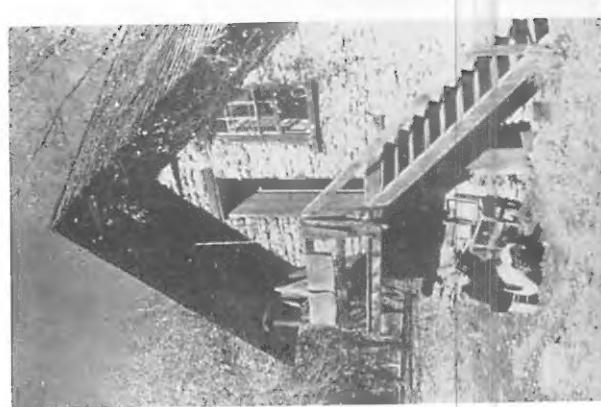

Milk House

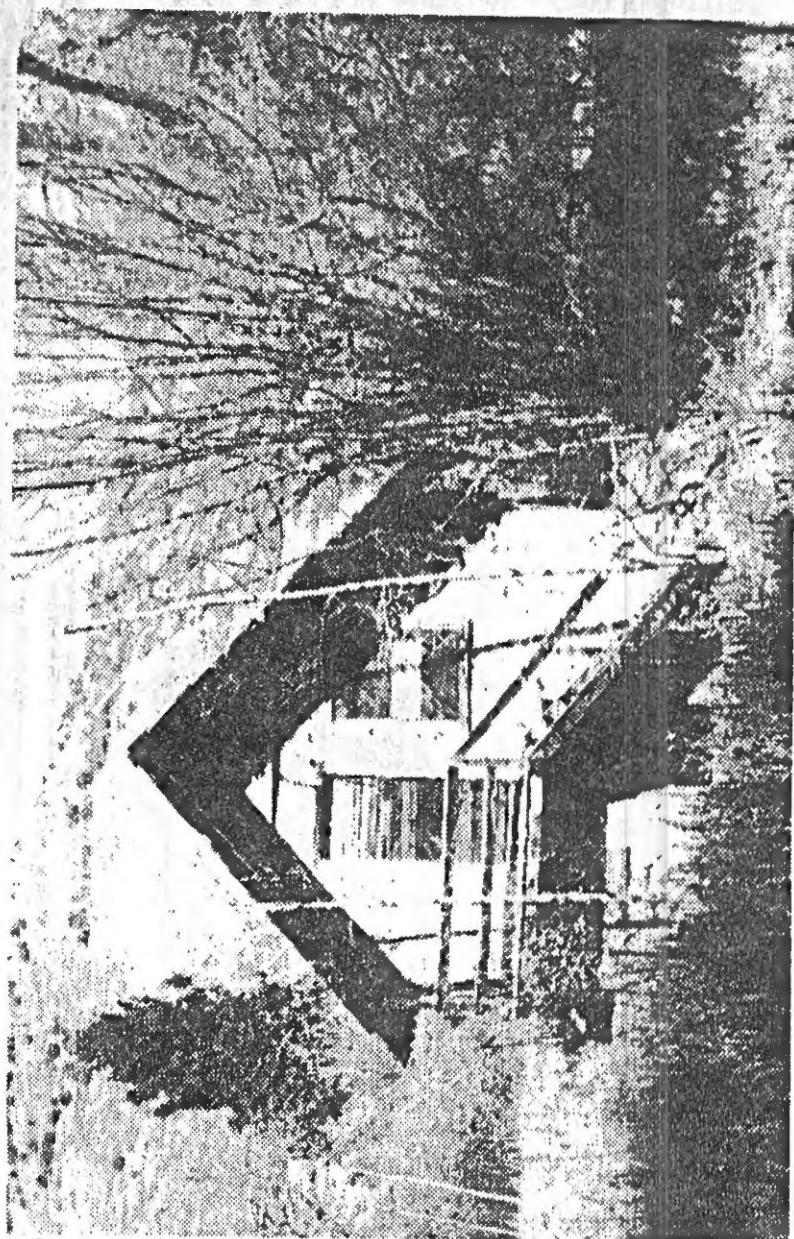

Example of early Pot-Rock building, built for milkhouse, in Midway.

"UNDER WASATCH SKIES"

Located on the John Huber farm, this building is now part of the Wasatch State Park and can be seen on the Golf Course.

Milk House